It thus ordinarily expresses, in the second and third persons, a command, a threat, or a promise. It is also employed in the language of prophecy. In shall with the first person, the necessity of the action is sometimes implied as residing elsewhere than in the speaker, as, I shall suffer; we shall see; and there is always a less distinct and positive assertion of his volition than is indicated by will. "I shall go" implies nearly a simple futurity; more exactly, a foretelling or an expectation of my going, in which, naturally enough, a certain degree of plan or intention may be included. In a question, the relation of speaker and source of obligation is of course transferred to the person addressed. After a conditional conjunction, as if, whether, shall is used in all persons to express futurity simply. Should is every where used in the same connection and the same senses as shall, as its imperfect. It also expresses duty or moral obligation. See WILL.

At a later period it was used for thick-set or bulky; and more recently, especially in England, the idea has been carried still further, so that Taylor says in his Synonyms, "The stout man has the proportions of an ox; he is corpulent, fat, and fleshy in relation to his size." Few in America entirely drop the original sense; and many who have read Washington Irving's story of the "Stout Gentleman" never suspected that he was merely a very fat man.

The Old Style follows the manner of computing the months and days established by Julius Caesar, according to which every fourth year consists of 366 days, and the other years of 365 days. This is about 11 minutes in a year too much. Pope Gregory XIII. reformed the calendar by retrenching 10 days in October, 1582, in order to bring back the vernal equinox to the same day as at the time of the council of Nice, A. D. 325. This reformation was adopted by act of Parliament in Great Britain in 1751, by which act 11 days in September, 1752, were retrenched, and the 3d day was reckoned the 14th. This mode of reckoning is called New Style, according to which every year divisible by 4, (unless it is divisible by 100 without being divisible by 400), has 366 days, and any other year 365 days.

Syn.—Identical; interchangeable.—If no words are synonymous except those which are identical in use and meaning, so that the one can in all cases be substituted for the other, we have scarcely ten such words in our language. But the term more properly denotes that the words in question approach so near to each other, that in many or most cases, they can be used interchangeably. 1. Words may thus coincide in certain connections, and so be interchangeable; when they cannot be interchanged in other connections; thus we may speak either of strength of mind or of force of mind, but we say the force (not strength) of gravitation. 2. Two words may differ slightly, but this difference may be unimportant to the speaker's object, so that he may freely interchange them; thus it makes but little difference, in most cases, whether we speak of a man's having secured his object or having attained his object. For these and other causes we have numerous words which may, in many cases or connections, be used interchangeably, and these are properly called synonyms.

Syn.—To disappoint; tease; vex; irritate; provoke.—To disappoint is literally to do away what was (or was taken to be) appointed; hence, the peculiar pain from hopes thus dashed to the ground. To tantalize describes a most distressing form of disappointment, as in the case of Tantalus, a Phrygian king in fabulous history, who was condemned to stand up to his chin in water, with a tree of fair fruit over his head, both of which, as he attempted to allay his hunger or thirst, fled from his approach. Empirical refers to knowledge which is gained by the experience of actual phenomena, without reference to the principles or laws to which they are to be referred, or by which they are to be explained. Transcendental has reference to those beliefs or principles which are not derived from experience, and yet are absolutely necessary to make experience possible or useful. Such, in the better sense of the term, is the transcendental philosophy, or transcendentalism. Each of these words has also been used in a bad sense. Empiricism, in this case, is applied to that one-sided view of knowledge which neglects or loses sight of the truths or principles referred to above, and trusts to experience alone. Transcendentalism has been applied to the opposite extreme, which, in its depreciation of experience, loses sight of the relation which facts and phenomena sustain to principles. Hence the term has been applied to a kind of investigation, or a use of language, which is vague, obscure, fantastic, or extravagant.

Trän'scend-ent'al-ism, n. (Kantian Philos.) The transcending or going beyond empiricism, and ascertaining a priori the fundamental principles of human knowledge.

Irregular. [I will, thou wilt, he will; imp. would; p. p. wanting.] (a.) To wish; to desire. (b.) As an auxiliary, used to denote futurity dependent on the subject of the verb. Thus, in the first person, "I will" denotes willingness; consent, promise; and when "I will" is emphasized, it denotes determination or fixed purpose. In the second and third persons, the idea of distinct volition, wish, or purpose, is evanescent, and simple certainty is appropriately expressed. To emphasize will denotes (according to the tone or context) certain futurity or fixed determination.

As in shall (which see), the second and third persons may be virtually converted into the first, either by question or indirect statement, so as to receive the meaning which belongs to will in that person.

In Ireland, Scotland, and the United States, especially in the southern and western portions of the United States, will is often improperly used for shall, and would for should, as in the following examples:—

I am able to devote as much time and attention to other subjects as I WILL [shall] be under the necessity of doing next winter. CHALMERS.

I WOULD [should] in vain attempt, adequately to express the emotions with which I received the testimonials of confidence and regard which you have recently addressed to me. JEFFERSON D. DAVIS.

Will is the preterit of will, is chiefly employed in conditional, subjunctive, or optative senses. It is used for both present and future time, in conditional propositions, and would have for past time. It is never a past participle.

A person of eminent sense or knowledge; a man of genius, fancy, or humor; one distinguished for bright or amusing sayings, for repartee, and the like.

Syn.—Ingenuity; humor; satire; sarcasm; irony; burlesque.—Wit formerly meant genius, and now denotes the power of seizing on some thought or occurrence, and, by a sudden turn, presenting it under aspects wholly new and unexpected—apparently natural and admissible, if not perfectly just, and bearing on the subject, or the parties concerned, with a laughable keenness and force. "What I want," said a pompous orator, aiming at his antagonist, "is common sense." "Exactly!" was the whispered reply. The pleasure we find in wit arises from the ingenuity of the turn, the sudden surprise it brings, and the pithiness of its application to the case, in the new and ludicrous relations thus flashed upon the view. Humor is a quality more congenial than wit to the English mind. It consists primarily in taking up the peculiarities of a humorist (a class of persons in which England abounds), and drawing them out, as Addison did those of Sir Roger de Coverley, so that we enjoy a hearty, good-natured laugh at the unconscious development he makes of his whims and oddities. From this original sense, the term has been widened to embrace other sources of kindly mirth of the same general character. In a well-known caricature upon English reserve, an Oxford student is represented as standing on the brink of a river, greatly agitated at the sight of a drowning man before him, and crying out, "O that I had been introduced to this gentleman, that I might save his life!" The "Silent Woman" of Ben Jonson is one of the most humorous productions, in the original sense of the term, which we have in our language.

It is certainly opposed to an important principle of our language, namely, that words in ou of Anglo-Saxon origin retain the regular Old English sound of ou, as sound, ground, found, &c. It is to be observed, however, that in Anglo-Saxon, the word was spelt wund, the u being sounded as oo, as it is, also, in the Icelandic wund, and the Gothic vunds.

The English, misled by the w, which usually causes an a immediately following it in the same syllable to take a broad sound, universally pronounce this word wröth, or wrawth; but this is contrary to analogy, for the w is silent, and the uttered letter r intervenes between it and the vowel; and besides, the letter a has its Italian sound, almost without exception, before th, as in bath, path, &c. METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

SCALE, $\frac{1}{10}$ of the Exact Size.

1 sq. Centimeter,
Exact Size.

Liquid
Milliliter.

In the Metric System, the Meter is the base of all the weights and measures employed.

The Meter was intended to be, and is very nearly, one ten millionth part of the distance measured on a meridian of the earth from the equator to the pole, and is about 39.37 inches.

The Meter is the primary unit of length.

Upon the Meter are based the following primary units: the Square Meter, the Are, the Cubic Meter or Stere, the Liter, and the Gram.

The Square Meter is the unit of measure for small surfaces; as the surface of a floor, table, etc.

The Are is the unit of land measure; this is a square whose side is 10 meters in length, and which contains 100 square meters.

The Cubic Meter, or Stere, is the unit of volume; this is a cube whose edge is 1 meter in length.

The Liter is the unit of capacity; this is the capacity of a cube whose edge is 1-10th of a meter in length.

The Gram is the unit of weight; this is the weight of distilled water contained in a cube whose edge is the 100th part of a meter in length.

From these primary units the higher and lower orders of units are derived decimally.

A GLOSSARY

SCOTTISH WORDS AND PHRASES.

THE Scottish dialect—or language, as it is sometimes called—is spoken in the south-eastern or lowland counties of Scotland. It is closely allied to the English, being mainly derived from the Anglo-Saxon, while a considerable proportion of its words are of French origin. Unlike the English, however, it has borrowed very largely from the Gaelic—spoken in the northern counties, or Highlands—and also from the Danish. Scottish literature, which is mostly poetical, began in the 14th century, with John Barbour, a contemporary of Chaucer. The most eminent writers of this dialect, in recent times, are Allan Ramsay, Robert Burns, Walter Scott, James Hogg, John Wilson, and John Galt. As the productions of some of these authors, especially Burns and Scott, are extensively read in England and America, the want of a general Glossary of the words and phrases used by them is often felt. To supply this want the present compilation is offered to the public in the belief that it will be deemed a useful and not inappropriate addition to an English Dictionary. It has been revised by Mr. William Russell, the well-known elocutionist and scholar, who, as a native of Scotland and a resident in different parts of that country, has had peculiar opportunities of acquiring a thorough knowledge and perfect use of the rustic dialect in all its purity. The remarks which follow—except those relating to the differences between English and Scottish orthography—are from his pen.

The difficulty to be overcome in attempting to give an English or an American reader a correct idea of the orthography of the Scottish dialect, is very great. The distinctive elementary sounds of the language of England and of Scotland, which two centuries ago were but slightly different to the ear, continue in the style of rural usage in Scotland but little changed, comparatively, from what they were; while, in England, modern usage, in city life especially, has undergone great changes; so that local dialect differs widely in the northern and southern parts of Great Britain. Even in Scotland, where time has had less effect in modifying spoken language, local differences of accent are to this day quite marked in character, and retain Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish modifications of utterance. Add to this fact another,—that, in the Scottish dialect, the words of Anglo-Saxon origin remain to a great extent unmodified in sound, while English usage has been greatly changed by the natural effect of the intermingling of Norman French in the daily communications of life between the conquering and the vanquished races. The natural consequence in these circumstances is, that it is exceedingly difficult for persons brought up in the rural districts of Scotland to acquire an appropriate style of English pronunciation; and it is much more difficult for Englishmen or Americans to read appropriately any passage written in the Scottish dialect. The very attempt, in the latter case, is, to the ears of a Scotchman, a ridiculous failure.

The remarks which follow will serve as illustrations of the radical difference in the style of pronunciation which characterizes the Scottish dialect, as contrasted with English usage, in regard to the distinctive sounds of letters.

1. The peculiar sound of a in such words as swan, wasp, wash, &c., English orthoëpists represent as nearly identical with the o of nor or not. In the Scottish dialect these words are pronounced with the sound of a as in and.

2. In such words as man, can, fan, fat, that, &c., the Scottish dialect adopts the sound of a as in arm, instead of the a in and.

3. The vowel e, occurring before the consonant r, when the latter is followed by a consonant, is given with the same sound as the e in error, instead of that modified sound which characterizes appropriate English and American usage at the present day. See Prin. of Pron. § 14, Note, p. ix.

4. The vowel i, in such words as mile, time, dine, &c., is, in the style of Scottish utterance, much closer than it is even in the usage of the most refined style of English society. The Scottish style, while it avoids the drawing roundness and great breadth characteristic of rustic English, in the utterance of the long sound of i, runs to the opposite extreme, and pinches it down to the same narrowness which belongs to the local style of Irish utterance.

5. A marked peculiarity of Scottish utterance occurs in all words containing the short sound of i, as in dim, him, sin, bit, lip, &c. In these and similar cases, the current usage of Scotland seems to border on dem, hem, sen, bet, lep, &c.

6. In all words which, according to English orthoëpy, are pronounced as marked in the dictionary, with the sound of o given as in the word on, the local usage of Scotland adopts that of o in old, without its proper prolongation and “vanish” (see Prin. of Pron. § 19, p. ix.); or, in other words, gives “long” or “close” o, cut short, but still remaining close. This class of words is very numerous, and so becomes peculiarly characteristic. It might be indicated thus: on, off, suff, lost, röd, söd, &c.

7. In many words in which English usage gives to the vowel u the same sound which it has in the word use, the Scottish dialect gives a sound not existing in any form of English utterance, but corresponding exactly to that of u in the French word plume. To this style belong all such words as tune, use (the noun), sire, dub; also the words moon, soon, done, &c. See Remark 5, p. 912.

8. The diphthong ae, in Scottish orthography, represents precisely the sound of the acute é of the French language, or of the initial element of the English a in ale. See Prin. of Pron. § 2, p. 7.

9. Ei and ey, in Scottish pronunciation, are subject to the same remark as the vowel i. See Remark 4.

10. The diphthong oi is given as i long; thus, boil (bile), toil (tile), moil (mile), join (jine), &c.

11. The diphthong oo, in Scottish usage, in the words moor, floor, &c., take the sound of eu in the French word peur. See Remark 12, p. 912.

12. The diphthongs ou and ow, in Scottish utterance, are given like oo in the word ooze; thus, our (oor), cow (coo), out (oot), house (hoos).

13. The diphthong ui, as in guid, puir, &c., represents the sound of u in the French word plume, somewhat broadened. See Remark, 7 above.

14. The letter r has, in Scottish usage, one uniformly hard and prolonged rolling sound, as in all the continental languages of Europe, and in the local style of Ireland. Thus, arm is pronounced with r made very forcible. So with all other words in which r occurs; thus, farm, further, turner, harper, truer, &c. See Prin. of Pron. § 89, p. xv.

15. Ch, as in aneuch, and gh, as in laugh, represent a very strong, harsh, guttural sound of the English element h, corresponding to the German ch in doch. In such words as abeigh, steigh, &c., the gh represents a similar sound, but more delicate and close,—a palatal or oral rather than a guttural element,—corresponding to the pronunciation of ch in the German words ich, echt, reich.

To these remarks on the leading peculiarities of Scottish pronunciation, may be added the following general rules respecting the distinctions between English and Scottish orthography, in words which were originally the same, having only a letter changed for another, or sometimes one taken away or added.

I. — In many words ending in English with an l, after an a or u, the l is rarely sounded in Scotland, and hence is omitted in writing them; as All (English), A' (Scots); Call, Ca'; Small, Sma'; Full, Fu'; Pull, Pu'; &c. The apostrophe is merely of modern use.

II. — The l changes in Scotland to a w or u after a a or o, and is frequently sunk before another consonant; as, Balm, Bawm; Balk, Bauk; False, Fause; Malt, Maut; Boll, Bow; Poll, Pow; &c.

III. — An o before ld, changes to a a or au; as, Old, Auld; Bold, Bauld; Cold, Cauld; Told, Tauld; &c.

IV. — O, oe, and ow, are changed to a, ae, or ai; as, Off, Aff; Toe, Tae; Own, Ain; Cloth, Clath; Most, Maist; Song, Sang; &c.

V. — O and u are frequently changed into i; as, Another, Anither; Brother, Brither; Foot, Fit; Honey, Hinny; Nuts, Nits; Run, Rin; &c.

A VOCABULARY

PERFECT AND ALLOWABLE RHYMES.

DIRECTIONS FOR FINDING RHYMES.

1. In looking for a word in the following vocabulary, consider the five vowels, A, E, I, O, U, and begin at the vowel that precedes the last consonant of the word; for example, to find persuade, and the words that rhyme to it, D is the last consonant, A the vowel that precedes it; look for ADE, and you will find made, fade, invade, and all the other words of that rhyme.

2. In like manner, if a word end in two or more consonants, begin at the vowel that immediately precedes the first of them; for example, land; N is first of the final consonants, A the vowel that precedes it; see AND, and you will find band, stand, command, &c.

3. But if a diphthong, that is to say, two or more vowels together, precedes the last consonant or consonants of a word, begin at the first of these two vowels; thus, to find the rhymes to disdain, look not for IN but for AIN, and you will find brain, chain, gain, &c.

4. To find a word that ends in a diphthong preceded by a consonant, begin only at the first vowel of the diphthong; for example, to find the rhymes to subdue, look for UE, and you will find clue, due, ensue, &c.

5. All the words that end in a single vowel, preceded by a consonant, are found by looking for that vowel only, except always the words that end in mute E, which are constantly found by the same method that has been already prescribed for finding the rhymes to persuade, whose final E is silent, and serves only to lengthen the sound of the A in the last syllable.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARY

SCRIPTURE PROPER NAMES.

BY WILLIAM A. WHEELER, M. A.

THE course pursued in the following Table has been to give first that mode of pronunciation which is deemed to be best supported, and to subjoin, as an alternative mode, any other pronunciation which has, to any considerable extent, the sanction of present and reputable usage. The names in the Vocabulary have been accented, divided into syllables, and marked in accordance with the system of notation employed in the previous part of this work. The consulter will not, therefore, require any Rules to guide him to a correct pronunciation; but the few which follow — being short and easy to remember — may perhaps be of some use when he happens not to have the Dictionary at hand.

RULES.

1. In Hebrew proper names, the letters have their usual English sounds, except in the cases specified below. See PRINCIPLES OF PRONUNCIATION, p. vii. et seq.

2. Every final i, forming a distinct syllable, has its long sound; as, A-bish/a-i, Ed/re-i, Thöm/o-i.

3. The vowels ai are sometimes pronounced in one syllable; as, Hu'shai, Si'nai; and sometimes in two; as, Sham/ma-i, Bar-zil/la-i. When pronounced in one syllable, they should be sounded like ai in aid; as, Hu'shāi, Si'nāi. Some speakers choose to give them the diphthongal sound ai, or i; but the practice, as Smart observes, is far from being common or established.

4. The vowels ei, when followed by a consonant, form a digraph, and are pronounced like ei in seize; as, Cēi/lan. When followed by a vowel, they are pronounced in separate syllables, and the i is generally sounded like consonant y: as, Sa-mē/yus (sa-mē'yus).

5. The vowels ia, following an accented vowel, are pronounced in one syllable, the i taking the sound of consonant y; as, Ban-na/ia (ban-nā'yā) I-sā/iah, (i-zā'yā), Je-dē/iah (je-dē'yā). In other cases, they are pronounced in separate syllables, and the accent is on the i: as, Sār/a-ia, Bēr/a-ia.

6. The letter g has its hard sound before e and i, as in the English words get, give; as, Gethsemane, Gilead. Bethphage, in consequence of having passed through the Greek of the New Testament, is an exception, the g being sounded soft, like j, conformably to the usual English mode of pronouncing words derived from the Greek.

7. Ch is pronounced like k; as, Chaldea, Enoch. Rachel is the only exception, the ch in this name being sounded like ch in chest. Cherub (kē'rūb), a city of the Babylonish empire, must not be confounded in pronunciation with cherub, one of an order of angels.

8. Gentile names ending in -ite (sing.) and -ites (pl.), together with feminine nouns of the same class in -itess, are English formatives, and follow the accent of their primitives; as, Am'mon-ite, Is'ra-el-ites, Ca'naan-ite'ss. The same is true of gentile adjectives ending in -itish; as, Mō'ab-ū'ish, Mid'i-an-ū'ish. Gentiles in -ene and -ine, with their plurals, are also Anglicized both in spelling and pronunciation; except Māg'da-lē'ne, which is commonly thus pronounced, as a classical word, the Anglicized form — which does not occur in the Scriptures — being Māg'da-len.

GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

THE following Vocabulary has been prepared by a careful selection of the more important of the names embraced in the Vocabulary furnished by Professor Thomas A. Thacher, of Yale College, for Webster's unabridged Dictionary, the edition of 1864; and the pronunciation as there given has been followed throughout. In the choice of names to be inserted, regard has been had both to liability to mispronunciation and to frequency of occurrence, and this Vocabulary is believed to be fully adequate for the ordinary wants of readers in English.

The authorities to which reference is made are divided into two groups. The first group consists of PASSOW, FREUND, KLOTZ, PAPE, and FACCIOLATI; the second, of SMITH, PAULY, CAER, LABBE, LIDDELL & SCOTT, BISCHOFF & MÖLLER, FORBIGER, SCHELLER, WALKER, MÜLLER, and FREILINK.

Words concerning whose pronunciation there can not be any question are printed without any reference. Such words, for instance, are Terp-sich'o-re, of which the Greek form (Τερψιχόρη) has omicron in the penult; Tha-li'a, which in Greek has the diphthong ei in the penult (Θάλεια); The-mis'ta, whose penult is long by position; and The'mis, a dissyllable.

Those words also stand without any reference whose pronunciation has the authority of any two of the names contained in the first group of authors given above, or the authority of any one of the first group together with one or more of the second group.

If, however, the authorities are divided, then, as a general thing, the two pronunciations are given, and the authority for each is indicated by initials annexed. But sometimes, when the authority for one pronunciation is sufficient according to the foregoing rule, and that for the other deficient, the latter authority only is indicated.

All the remaining words in the Vocabulary have the authority for their pronunciation annexed.

RULES

FOR PRONOUNCING THE VOWELS AND CONSONANTS OF GREEK AND LATIN PROPER NAMES.

RULES FOR THE VOWELS.

1. Any vowel at the end of an accented syllable, and e, o, and u, at the end of an unaccented syllable, have the long English sound; as, Ca'to, Ce'trops, Di'do, So'llon, Cu'mæ, Me-lis'sa, Mo-los'sus, Tu-lin'gi; in which words the final vowels of the first syllables have the same sound as the corresponding vowels in the first syllables of the English words pa'per, ce'dar, si'lent, col'lon, du'ty.

2. A ending an unaccented syllable has the sound of a in fa'ther or in last; as, Ga-bi'na, A-re'ne, pronounced Gah-bi'nah, Ah-re'ne.

3. I ending a final syllable has the long sound, as To'mi. At the end of initial unaccented syllables it varies, somewhat indefinitely, between i long, as I-u'tus, and i short (like i in pin), as in I-ta'li-a. In all other cases i ending an unaccented syllable has its short sound, as in pin.

4. Y is pronounced as i would be in the same situation.

5. Æ and æ are pronounced as e would be in the same situation.

6. If a syllable end in a consonant, the vowel has the short English sound; as, Bal'bus, Del'phi, Cin'na, Mos'chus, Tus'cus, in which the vowels have the same sounds as in the English words man'ner, sel'dom, din'ner, scof'fer, must'er.

EXCEPTION. — E in final es is pronounced as in the familiar proper name An'des.

RULES FOR THE CONSONANTS.

7. C before e, i, y, æ, and æ, is pronounced like s; before a, o, and u, and before consonants, like k; as Ce'a, Cic'e-ro, Cy'prus, Cæ'sar, Cæ'li-a, Ca'to, Co'cles, Cu'mæ.

8. G before e, i, y, æ, or another g followed by e, has the sound of j; before a, o, and u, and before consonants other than g, as above excepted, the hard sound, as in the English words gave, gone; as, Ge'lo, Gi-gan'tes, Gy-gæ'us, Ag'ger, Ga'bi-i, Gor'gi-as, Sa-gun'tum.

9. Ch has the sound of k, but it is silent before a mute consonant at the beginning of a word; as, Chtho'nia, pronounced Tho'ni-a.

10. T, s, and c, before ia, ie, ii, io, iu, and eu, preceded immediately by the accent, in Latin words, as in English, change into sh and zh. But when the t follows s, t, or z, or when the accent falls on the first of the vowels following, the consonant preserves its pure sound; as, Sal-lus'ti-us, Bru'ti-i, Mil-ti'a-des, &c. T in the termination tion also retains its original sound; as, The-o-do'ti-on.

11. S has, in general, the sound of s in this. Final s preceded by e, or a liquid, has the sound of z.

12. Initial z has the sound of z.

13. Initial ph before a mute is silent; as, Phthi'a, pronounced Thi'a. Initial p before s is silent; as, Psy'che, pronounced Sy'ke. Initial p before t is silent; as, Ptol-e-mæ'us, pronounced Tol-e-mæ'us.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

Valuable assistance has been derived, in the preparation of this Vocabulary, from Ingram's edition of the Saxon Chronicle (London, 1823), a Vocabulary of Geographical Etymology in Sullivan's Dictionary of Derivations (Dublin, 1851), Charnock's Local Etymology (London, 1859), Foster's Manual of Geographical Pronunciation and Etymology (London, 1860), Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World (Philadelphia, 1855), Gibson's Etymological Geography (Edinburgh, 1840), Taylor's Words and Places (London, 1865), and from various other sources. Many of the translations of the Indian names here given have been furnished, and all of them examined, by Henry B. Schoolcraft, LL.D., and the Hon. J. Hammond Trumbull, whose high reputation and well-known accuracy in whatever relates to the Indian language, literature, and history, are a sufficient guaranty for the correctness of this portion of the Vocabulary. Information in regard to certain names of the same class has also been obtained from the Rev. Edward Ballard, Secretary of the Maine Historical Society.

PRONOUNCING VOCABULARIES

MODERN GEOGRAPHICAL AND BIOGRAPHICAL NAMES.

By J. THOMAS, M. D.,

AUTHOR OF THE SYSTEM OF GEOGRAPHICAL PRONUNCIATION IN LIPPINCOTT'S GAZETTEER OF THE WORLD.

PREFATORY REMARKS.

THE system adopted in the following Vocabularies — now generally acknowledged to be the only rational and satisfactory one for the pronunciation of geographical and biographical names — is, to pronounce all names as nearly as possible as they are pronounced by the educated people of the respective countries to which they belong, excepting only those few well-known foreign names which appear to have acquired an established English pronunciation, such as Paris, Naples, Florence, Venice, Milan, Munich, &c.

It is admitted that cases not unfrequently occur, in which it is impossible to convey with any great degree of precision the native pronunciation of other countries by means of English letters; but much is undoubtedly gained by such an approximation to the true sound as is within the reach of even the mere English scholar, since this would enable him more readily to understand, and to be understood by, those who are familiar with names as spoken by the inhabitants of the respective countries to which such names belong.

In the preparation of these Vocabularies, the aim has been to give them practical utility rather than great fullness or extent; accordingly, those English and American names (such as Franklin, Johnson, Thomson, &c.) of which the pronunciation could scarcely be mistaken, have generally been omitted, and the space thus gained has been filled with the more difficult names of other countries.

In giving the pronunciation of geographical and biographical names, perhaps the most important, and certainly the most difficult, point of all, is to mark the accent correctly. In fulfilling this task, information has been sought from every accessible source, and especially from educated natives, not only of the different countries, but of different parts of the same country. With respect to the pronunciations contained in the following Vocabularies, it is believed that they will be found to be as minutely exact as they could with propriety be given in a work designed chiefly for the use of the mere English scholar. Particular care has been taken with what may be termed the four great languages of Continental Europe (viz., the French, German, Italian, and Spanish), not merely to mark the accent correctly, but to represent, as far as possible, every important peculiarity of sound. It is, however, scarcely necessary to observe, that no system of notation, based upon the sounds of the English tongue, can represent exactly the pronunciation of words in other languages.

With regard to English proper names, the difficulty is not in representing, but in ascertaining, the true pronunciation. All those causes which operate in other languages to produce irregularity in accent or anomalies in the sounds of letters, would seem to prevail in a pre-eminent degree in regard to English proper names. Add to this that the same name is in many instances pronounced differently by different families, so that it becomes necessary not only to ascertain the pronunciation generally adopted by the best speakers, but also to attempt the far more difficult task of searching out the peculiar preferences, not to say caprices, of families, and even of individuals.

The greatest pains have been taken by the author of the following Vocabularies to render them as complete and correct as possible. The candid and intelligent critic will, of course, make due allowance for such deficiencies as are inherent in their character and necessarily limited extent. Those who may feel a particular interest in such subjects are referred to the Introduction of Lippincott's Gazetteer of the World, in which the principles in regard to the pronunciation of foreign names are much more fully developed and explained.

The author can not conclude without acknowledging the valuable assistance which he has received from Mr. William A. Wheeler, who has for a number of years studied the subject of orthoëpy, in its various branches, with great diligence and success.

ELEMENTS OF PRONUNCIATION

OF THE PRINCIPAL MODERN LANGUAGES OF CONTINENTAL EUROPE.

VOWELS.

1. In the languages of Continental Europe, a never has a sound like that in the English words fate or name, but is usually like the a in far or father, often approximating that in fat. In Hungarian it is sometimes like e in net.
2. E generally has a sound similar to a in fate, or else to i in met. In French it is often silent. In Swedish, e, when long, has a sound resembling that of short i, but more prolonged. Thus, Carlén might be pronounced kar-lén'. When short, it is like e in met.

3. I usually sounds as in marine; that is, like long e in English. It is sometimes like our short i, as in pin. It is important to observe that i final in French, Italian, and Spanish, has the full, clear sound of ee in see; it should therefore not be allowed to fall into i, as it is apt to do in English or Anglicized words.

4. O has for the most part nearly the same sound as in English. Sometimes it is long, as in no, but often it has a sound intermediate between that of our o in no and that in not. (See Observation VI. on p. 914.) In Russian, o, when not accented, is very short, almost like a in father, or intermediate between this and that in fat. In Swedish and Norwegian, at the end of a syllable, it is sounded like our oo.

5. U in most languages is pronounced like the English oo. In French (and in Dutch when it ends a syllable) it may be said to combine the sounds of our oo and long e. If the speaker, after placing his lips in the position for pronouncing oo, endeavors, without moving his lips, to utter the sound of ee, that of the French u will be produced.

6. Y is usually like i, that is, like our e. In Danish, Norwegian, and Swedish, it sounds like the French u or German ü. In Polish it resembles our short i, as in pin. In Dutch it is like our long i. It may be observed, that, according to the modern Dutch orthography, ij is substituted for y. Thus, the old spelling Overijssel is replaced by Overijssel, Bilderdyk by Bilderdijk, &c.

DIPHTHONGS.

7. Aa in Danish usually sounds nearly like our a in fall, sometimes approaching o long. Ä (ä) in Swedish sounds like long o in English.

8. Äe, or ä, is usually pronounced like a in fate, or e in met. In Dutch and Flemish ae sounds like a in far. In the modern Dutch orthography, ae is replaced by aa. Thus, the name formerly written Haerlem, is now Haarlem, Maes is changed into Maas, &c.

9. Äi and ay are usually proper diphthongs, being compounded of the sound of a as in far and i as in fig, thus nearly corresponding in sound to our long i. In French, and in Modern Greek, they are pronounced nearly like ay in the English word day; that is to say, like the long a in fate.

10. Au has generally the sound of ow in now. In French au and eau have the sound of long o.

11. Ei and ey are generally proper diphthongs, uniting the sounds of a in fate and e in me, being similar to ay in day when this word is pronounced very full. In German they are like our long i; in French, nearly like our e in met, or a in fate.

12. Eö in French and Dutch has a sound nearly similar to u in the English word fur, but somewhat more prolonged. This sound is intermediate between that of the English short u and that of the German ü. (See 14.) In German eu and äu have the sound of oi in English.

13. Ie at the end of a word is always pronounced in French like e in the English word me. In German it is frequently so pronounced. In the middle of a word, ie, both in Dutch and German, always sounds like our long e.

14. Oe, or ö, occurs in several European languages. In Danish, however, instead of two dots being placed over the o, a mark is drawn obliquely through it (ø). The sound is unlike any thing we have in English, but is nearest to that of u in fur, or e in her. If, while the lips are retained in the position proper for forming o long, the speaker tries to utter the sound of e in met (or a in fate), he will produce the sound of ø. [Respecting this sound, as well as that of the French u, should, if possible, be learned from an oral instructor.] In Dutch, oe sounds like our oo.

15. Oi in French is usually sounded like wä; moi, is pronounced muä; roi, ruä; &c. Oi in the termination of certain adjectives, was formerly used instead of ai, and was pronounced like this diphthong. Now, however, oi in such words is almost universally replaced by ai. Thus, instead of François, Françoise (French), the forms Français and Française are now used.

16. Ou in French and in Modern Greek sounds like our oo; in Dutch and Norwegian, like ow in the English word now, or like ou in house. In Portuguese it is pronounced nearly like long o.

17. Ue or ü, has the sound of the French u. (See 5.) [Respecting the double vowels, see Observation V. p. 914.]

CONSONANTS.

The consonants in the languages of Continental Europe are, for the most part, similar in sound to the same letters in English. The following exceptions may be mentioned:—

18. B at the end of a word in German is pronounced like p. Between two vowels in Spanish its sound is somewhat similar to v, with which it is often interchanged; as, Cordoba, Cordova, &c. This sound of b is formed by bringing the lips loosely or feebly into contact.

19. C before e and i in Italian is pronounced like ch in the English word chill; in the same position in Spanish it sounds like the Spanish z or like our th in thin. In German, c before e, i, and y is pronounced like the German z, or like ts in English. In Polish it has the same sound, even at the end of a word.

20. D at the end of a word in German and Dutch is pronounced like t. In Spanish and Danish, between two vowels or at the end of a word, it has a sound similar to th in this.

21. In all the European languages g is hard before a, o, and u; in German, Danish, Norwegian, and Polish, it is hard in every situation, though it sometimes has a guttural sound. Before e and i (or y), in French, Portuguese, Spanish, and Swedish, it is like the j of these languages. In the same position in Italian it sounds like our j, or soft g. In Dutch it is always pronounced like h strongly aspirated. Gu before e and i, in French, Portuguese, and Spanish, sounds like g hard.

22. H in French, Italian, Spanish, and Portuguese, is either never pronounced at all, or else is sounded so slightly that an English ear can scarcely perceive it. In the other languages of Europe it has the same sound as in English.

23. J in Italian, German, Polish, Swedish, Norwegian, Danish, and Dutch, is pronounced like our y. In French and Portuguese it has the sound of zh, or s in the English word pleasure. In Spanish it is equivalent to z, being similar in sound to a strongly aspirated h.

24. Often at the end of a syllable, in French and Portuguese, m and n are said to have a nasal sound; but, more correctly speaking, dropping their own proper character, they impart nasality to the preceding vowels, which are then sounded through the nose. For example, ban in French approximates in sound that indicated by böng in English. Alem or alen, in Portuguese is pronounced almost ä-lëng'. In pronouncing the nasal vowels in these languages, care should be used not to press the back part of the tongue against the palate, as is done in producing the sound of the English ng. In French, o before n nasal has nearly the sound of our o in note, but is somewhat shorter. That is to say, if the English word no be pronounced quickly, with the vowel rendered nasal, the sound produced will correspond almost exactly to that of the French non. N in Italian before g usually preserves its clear sound; hence Marengo is pronounced almost mä-renn'go; in all or nearly all the other languages, n in such cases approximates the sound of the English n in link.

25. Ñ in Spanish (like gn in French and Italian, and nh in Portuguese) has a sound combining that of n and y consonant. Miño and Minho are pronounced alike—meen'yo.

26. Qu before e and i in Portuguese and Spanish, and before every vowel in French, has the sound of k. In most other languages it is essentially the same as in English.

27. R in most European languages is trilled more strongly than in English, particularly at the end of a word er syllable. In pronouncing it, the tip of the tongue is made to approach very near to the roots of the upper teeth.

28. S in many European tongues, when between two vowels, is very soft, having the sound of our z, or one very near it. In German it is usually pronounced soft at the beginning of a word. In Hungarian it sounds like our sh, or the German sch.

29. T in several European tongues has a sound somewhat more dental than in English. This is especially observable in Spanish, in which language it is pronounced by putting the tip of the tongue against the upper teeth.

30. W in German and some other languages is nearly similar to our v. It may be described as a v uttered with the lips alone, without the aid of the teeth.

31. X in Spanish generally sounds like a strongly aspirated h. (See 23.) In Portuguese it is pronounced like our sh.

32. Z in German and Swedish has the sound of ts; in Italian, z usually sounds like dz, zz like ts. In Spanish it is pronounced like the English th in thin.

COMBINED CONSONANTS.

33. Ch in Spanish has the same sound as in the English word chill. In Italian, it is pronounced like k; in German, Polish, and some other languages, it has a guttural sound, somewhat similar to a strongly aspirated h. This sound must be learned from an oral instructor. In French (except in the case of some words derived from the Greek), and in Portuguese, ch has the sound of our sh.

34. Cs in Hungarian sounds like ch in the English word church.

35. Cz in Polish sounds like our ch; in Hungarian, like ts.

36. Dy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and consonant y, and hence approximates the sound of our j. The same combination occurs in some English words, as in soldier, verdure, &c. (See 44.)

37. Gh in Italian is like gh in the English word ghost, or g in game.

38. Gl in Italian, when followed by i, has the same sound as lh in Portuguese, or ll in Spanish. Before a, o, or u, the i following gl is silent. (See 41.)

39. Gn in French and Italian (like ñ in Spanish) combines the sounds of n and consonant y. (See 25.)

40. Gy in Hungarian blends the sounds of d and y consonant. Magyar is pronounced möd'yör'. (See 35.)

41. Lh in Portuguese, and ll in Spanish, combine the sounds of l and y consonant. For example, velho is pronounced vel'yo; villa, veel'yä; llano, lyä'no. Ly in Hungarian has also the sound of ll in Spanish. Ll in French, when preceded by i, was formerly, in certain words, sounded like the Spanish ll; but according to the modern popular pronunciation, all sound of the l in such words is dropped. Aurillac, formerly ô'rël'yäk', is now generally sounded ô're'yäk'; Bouillon, formerly boo'l'yôn', is now boo'yôn', &c. It may be observed, however, that public speakers, and others who aim to be very correct in their pronunciation, still frequently retain the sound of the l.

42. Nh in Portuguese is pronounced like the Spanish ñ. (See 25 and 39.) Ny in Hungarian has the same sound.

43. Sc in Italian, before e and i, sounds like the English sh.

44. Sz in Hungarian is sounded like sharp s, or ss; but zs is like our zh. In Polish, sz sounds like our sh.

45. Sch in German is pronounced like sh in English; in Italian, before e and i, it sounds like sk in English, and in Dutch, before all the vowels, its sound is similar, but harsher and more guttural.

46. Th in all the modern languages of Continental Europe except Greek (in which the character θ has the same sound as our th), is pronounced like simple t, or like th in the English word thyme.

47. Ts in Hungarian is like cs in the same language; that is, like our ch in church.

48. Ty in Hungarian blends the sounds of t and consonant y: it approaches in sound our ch. A similar combination of t with the sound of consonant y takes place in the English words creature, righteous, virtue.

ACCENT.

49. By accent is usually meant, in English, that particular impulse or stress of the voice which, in pronunciation, is placed upon certain syllables of a word; for example, on the last syllable in confer and retain, on the second in America, and on the first and last in evermore. Many words in English (like the one last cited) have two accents; but one is always predominant, and is termed the primary accent; the other is called the secondary accent.

Something analogous to English accentuation is found in nearly all languages. In the Teutonic tongues, especially, the accent is essentially the same as in English, a large number of the polysyllabic words having both the primary and secondary accent, as Son'ders-haus'en, Zoll've-rein'.

It is very difficult, if not impossible, to give any general rules, that would be of much practical utility, for placing the accent on foreign words or names. Among what may be termed the principal European languages (viz., English, French, German, Italian, Russian, and Spanish), there is scarcely one general rule for accent to which there are not a multitude of exceptions. Those of most general application are perhaps the following: In Spanish and Portuguese, words ending in a vowel usually have the accent on the penultima; those ending in a consonant are generally accented on the last syllable: yet even to these there are numerous exceptions; e.g., Alcalá, Córdoba, Andújar, Cádiz, &c.

50. In Spanish, the difference between accented and unaccented syllables, though sufficiently obvious to a native, is sometimes scarcely perceptible to a foreigner.

51. In Hungarian, there is no accent, according to our use of this word; but the syllables are distinguished from each other by quantity, being, like the Latin, divided into long and short. But as quantity in Latin and Greek is converted into accent by the usage of English pronunciation, so, in giving Hungarian names in the following vocabularies, the accent is placed according to quantity whenever this could be satisfactorily ascertained.

52. The French language also has no accent, in the sense in which we employ the term. The marks called accents that are placed over the different vowels, serve only to indicate some particular sound of these letters, and not that peculiar impulse of the voice which characterizes an accented syllable in the English and most other European tongues. Thus, the accent over the e in parlé serves to show that this vowel has its first French sound, and at the same time distinguishes it from parle, another form of the same verb, in which the e is mute. The circumflex imparts to the vowels over which it is placed a longer and deeper sound than ordinary; e.g., in hâte, tempête, gîte, and apôte.

It is commonly said that the French pronounce all the syllables of a word with an equal stress of voice, but that they seem to an English ear to accentuate the last, because in our language the universal tendency is to throw the accent toward the beginning of the word. Accordingly, the principal accent has been placed on the last syllable of French names: at the same time it has been thought proper to mark the others with secondary accents, in order to prevent them from being pronounced too slightly or indistinctly, as is usually the case with unaccented syllables in English. The pronunciation of Orléans, for example, has been thus given — or'lä'ôn'.

OBSERVATIONS.

I. I, in French and some other languages, often has a sound that is sometimes said to be between our ee and short i. It is, however, properly the pure sound of e as in me or ee as in see, pronounced short. This sound is represented by ê.

II. It may be observed that a, as in the English word day, when uttered fully and distinctly, is a true diphthong, consisting of a sound nearly like that of e in there or met (but less open), prefixed to (or combined with) that of short i. In pronouncing foreign names, â (used to represent long e in German, Italian, &c.) should never have this diphthongal sound; in other words, the terminal element, resembling short i, should be carefully excluded.

III. In marking the pronunciation of foreign names, except where a full accent falls upon the vowel, we have usually preferred to use â, e (or ê), and ô, rather than ā, ē, ō, as the speaker would be in danger of prolonging the sounds of the latter too much.

IV. E (not marked with an accent) in French is usually silent; and it is occasionally so in Danish and German.

V. A double letter, in foreign words, is generally to be sounded more distinctly and fully than a single letter of the same kind. This remark applies to nearly all the double vowels in foreign languages (except aa in Danish and Norwegian, already explained under the diphthongs, see 7, p. 912); ee and oo in Dutch and German, ii and uu in Danish and Norwegian, being simply equivalent to the single vowel prolonged. Ss, except in Hungarian, has the sound of sharp s, as in our words so, house, &c. (See 28.)

VI. It will be observed that in the following Vocabularies, o followed by a single consonant in the pronunciation of foreign names is usually without any diacritical mark (e. g., Heilbronn, hîl-bron', Pignerol, pên'ye-rol'). In such cases the English scholar will, of course, pronounce it like short o, as in folly, this being perhaps the nearest English approximation to the true sound; yet, properly speaking, the sound approaches that of o in nor, and is, in fact, intermediate between o in not and o in note. This at least is true of the French, German, and Italian. The reader should be particularly on his guard, in such cases, not to give the o a flat sound, as is too often done, so that not is pronounced almost as if it were written nât. This, in speaking English, is a very bad fault, but is still more objectionable in pronouncing foreign words.

VII. In respelling for pronunciation, marks on the vowels have generally been dispensed with, when the sounds of the letters could not easily be mistaken. Thus, for example, char/pee gives the pronunciation of the Italian name Ciampi no less perfectly, and more simply, than châr/pê; for the same reason far-sis-tân', as the pronunciation of Farsistan, is preferable to fâr-sis-tân'. In all cases, however, where it was thought that the omission of the diacritical sign might give rise to doubt or error, such sign has been added, inasmuch as practical utility has been deemed to be far more important than the mere show of consistency.

Turk. Turkish.

2, 3, 4, 5, 6, marked with this sign [˘] underneath, have an obscure sound similar to that of short u, but are usually considerably shorter, and, indeed, sometimes are almost mute: thus, Grât'tan might be pronounced grât'tîn or grât'tin; Hêl'ter, hêl'tur or hêl't'r, &c.

2, 3, 4, 5 are similar in sound to â, ê, ô, but are not to be pronounced so long.

â is employed to denote the long sound of â.

ê has a sound similar to e in her (see 14*); it may be Anglicized by e.

ê is like the French u (see 5*), which it is employed in pronunciation to represent; it may be Anglicized by the English u.

u, small capital, is intended to represent the sound of the French eu (see 12*); it should be pronounced nearly like u in the English word fur.

2, small capital, is used to denote the sound of b in Spanish, often nearly approximating that of v. (See 18.)*

D, small capital, is intended to represent a sound similar to th in this. (See 20.)*

G and H, small capitals, indicate the sound of the German ch, or one similar to it. (See 33.)*

H, small capital, has a sound somewhat similar to the preceding, but more resembling a strongly aspirated h.

l (liquid) is to be pronounced like li in million; it blends the sounds of l and y consonant. (See 41.)*

M and N, small capitals, are used to represent the nasal sound in French, being similar in sound to ng. (See 24.)*

ñ is pronounced like ni in minion; it blends the sounds of n and y consonant. (See 25 and 42.)*

R, small capital, has nearly the sound of rr in terror, but stronger. (See 27.)*

š is used to indicate that the sound of the s is very soft, nearly resembling our z. In the middle of a word it should be pronounced like a soft z.

ŵ has a sound similar to our v. (See 30.)* The ˘ over the w is intended to point out its alliance to our v.

y and ey at the end of an unaccented syllable sound like i in pin.

au and aw have the sound of a in fall.

é indicates the clear sound of short i before r, as in the English words spirit, miracle, &c. ow is to be pronounced like ow in cow, and ou like ou in house. In respelling for pronunciation, ow has been replaced by ou, wherever the former combination would be liable to be pronounced like long o, as in grove, tow, &c.

ss is sometimes used to mark the sharp sound of s where a single s would be liable to be pronounced like z; e. g., Mons, mōNs, not mōNs.

th is to be pronounced like th in this.

* These figures refer to the Elements of Pronunciation given above.

'is sometimes used to denote the breathing in French names in which the h is said to be aspirated. It is less strongly pronounced than h in English.

 The primary or principal accent in any name having two accents is marked thus ('); the secondary or subordinate accent thus ('); as Pas'sa-ma-quod'dy.

 The sounds of the marked letters are explained in the Vocabulary at the bottom of each page.

OBSERVATIONS

NECESSARY TO BE BORNE IN MIND BY THOSE WHO MAKE USE OF THE TWO FOLLOWING VOCABULARIES.

1. Every letter or combination of letters occurring in the pronunciation of a word or name, is to be pronounced with its proper English sound; e. g., ch is to be sounded as in chill, g as in get, &c. From not attending to this simple and obvious rule, many persons fail to pronounce names correctly, even while they have the pronunciation clearly and accurately marked before their eyes.

2. In the pronunciation of foreign names, particular care should be taken not to allow ä to fall into the third or broad sound of this vowel — an error to which American and English speakers are very prone; it would be far better, generally speaking, to pronounce it like a in fat. It has already been observed, however, that a before n nasal in French is broad, almost like o in not.

3. In pronouncing French words containing on nasal, the speaker should be careful not to give o its short sound, since this is not only incorrect, but is liable to confound the word with others entirely different in spelling and signification. By this faulty pronunciation, bon (good) is sounded like ban (ban or exile); bon should be pronounced bōn — almost bōng. For the same reasons, eu, in names not Anglicized, should have its distinct sound, like our u in fur, and not be confounded with the French ou or u. There is no sufficient reason why the French names Dreux (drūh) and Drouz (droo), Leure (lūr) and Lure (lūr), should not be distinguished from each other in pronunciation, as well as our words grum and groom, cür and cure.

4. In the pronunciation of foreign names, the speaker should be careful to pronounce all vowels, whether in an accented or unaccented syllable, distinctly, if they are not expressly marked as obscure.

5. When h (not small capital) occurs at the end of a syllable in the pronunciation of a name, it is not generally to be sounded. It is often used, for example, after U (representing the sound of the French eu), that the learner may not give this vowel the sound of u in cube or rule, as otherwise he would be apt to do.

It may be remarked, however, that, in a very few instances, h, at the end of Persian or Arabic names, is distinctly pronounced in those languages, and has therefore been repeated in the pronunciation; e. g., Nadir shah, nä'dīr shāh.

6. It is to be observed that the number of syllables in the names of the two following Vocabularies is to be determined by the number of accents or hyphens, or of both together; thus dnyēs'tēr, the Russian pronunciation of Dniester, must be pronounced, not dni-ēs'tēr, but dnyēs'tēr, the ny being employed to indicate the sound of the Spanish ñ, that is, the sound of ni in minion.

7. The abbreviation Syn. (Synonym, or synonymous with) indicates that the name to which it is affixed is either simply another spelling of the name referred to, or that it designates the same person or place.

 Sev-as-to'pol (or se-vas-to-pol): less correctly, Sebastopol (in Russian Севастро-поль, sē-vās-to'pol').
 It should be observed that b in Russian corresponds to our r, being never, in any case, pronounced like the English b; therefore Sebastopol is an incorrect spelling. With regard to the pronunciation of this name, it may be stated that not only the inhabitants of the town itself, but educated Russians everywhere, invariably speak it with the accent as above given. In England, Sevastopol is the common pronunciation, but Sevastopol is not unfrequently heard among persons of the highest education.

Wy-ō-nīng

The correctness of this pronunciation is often called in question, because the poet Campbell pronounces the name Wyoming, with the accent on the first syllable. This accentuation is readily explained by the fact that

Campbell was never in the United States, and having no opportunity of ascertaining the correct pronunciation of the name, he naturally placed the accent according to the general tendency of our language, that is, on the antepenultimate syllable.

II. CHEMICAL.

- One equivalent of oxygen; — written above a symbol representing an element, and repeated to indicate two, three, or more equivalents; thus, Fe denotes a compound of one equivalent of oxygen with one of iron; 8 a compound of three equivalents of oxygen with one of sulphur.
- One equivalent of sulphur; — used in the same manner as the preceding; thus, Fe denotes a compound of two equivalents of sulphur and one of iron.

A dash drawn across a symbol having either of the foregoing signs above it, denotes that two equivalents of the substance represented by the symbol are joined with the number of equivalents of oxygen or sulphur indicated by the dots or commas; thus, Fe represents a compound of two equivalents of iron and three of oxygen, forming sesqui-oxide of iron.

+ indicates, in organic chemistry, a base or alkalioid, when placed above the initial letter of the name of the substance; as, M, morphine; Q quinine.

— indicates, in organic chemistry, an acid, when placed above the initial letter of the name of the acid; as, C, citric acid; T, tartaric acid.

Every elementary substance is represented, in chemical notation, by a symbol consisting of the initial or abbreviation of its Latin name; as, H for hydrogen, O for oxygen, Ag (from Argentum) for silver, and the like, each symbol, when used singly, always indicating a single atom or equivalent of the substance represented by it; thus, O stands for one atom or equivalent of oxygen, C for a single equivalent of carbon, and the others in like manner. A compound body made up of single equivalents of its constituents is represented by the two symbols of the respective constituents written side by side; as, HO, a compound of one equivalent of hydrogen with one of oxygen, forming water. To express more than one atom or equivalent of a substance, a number is used, either prefixed to the symbol, or, more commonly, written after it, below the line; as, 2O, or O₂, two equivalents of oxygen.

A secondary compound, as a salt, is indicated by writing the symbols of the constituent compounds one after another, with the sign + between them, the symbol of the base being always placed first; thus, CaO + CO₂ represents carbonate of lime. A comma is frequently used instead of the sign +, commonly to express a more intimate union than would be expressed by that sign. The period is also sometimes used to indicate a union more intimate than that denoted by the sign +, but less so than that implied by a comma. A number written before the symbol of a compound designates a corresponding number of equivalents of that compound; as, 3 SO₃, three equivalents of sulphuric acid. When the formula of the quantity contains several terms, those to which the figure applies are included in parentheses or brackets, to which the figure is prefixed; as, 3 (CaO + SO₃), three equivalents of sulphate of lime.

III. MATHEMATICAL.

THE RELATIONS OF QUANTITIES.

- + Plus; and; more; — indicating addition; as $a + b = c$; — used also to indicate that figures have been omitted from the end of a number, or that the latter is approximately exact; as, the square root of 2 is 1.4142136 +.
- Minus; less; — indicating subtraction; as, $a - b = c$.
- ±, or ∓ Plus or minus; ambiguous; — indicating that the number or quantity to which it is prefixed may have either of the signs + or —; as, $a \pm b$.
- × Multiplied by; times; into; as, $a \times b = ab$; $6 \times 4 = 24$.

Multiplication is also often indicated by placing a dot between the factors, or by writing the latter, when not numerals, one after another without any sign.

÷, or : Divided by; as, $a \div b$; that is, a divided by b ; $6 \div 3 = 2$.

Division is also very often indicated by writing the divisor under the dividend, with a line between them; as $\frac{a}{b}$; that is, a divided by b ; $\frac{6}{3} = 2$.

= Is equal to; equals; as, $(a + b) \times c = ac + bc$; $6 + 2 = 8$.

> Is greater than; as, $a > b$; that is, a is greater than b ; $6 > 5$.

 $\leq$ Is equivalent to; — applied to magnitudes or quantities which are equal in area or volume, but are not of the same form, or capable of superposition.
 $\sim$ The difference between; — used to indicate the difference between two quantities without designating which is the greater; as, $a \sim b$.
 $\propto$ Varies as; is proportional to; as, $a \propto b$.
 $\frac{a}{b}$ Is to; the ratio of; — used to indicate geometrical proportion; as, $a:b::c:d$; that is, a is to b as c is to d .
 $\therefore$ Hence; therefore; on this account.
 $\because$ Because.
 ∞ Indefinitely great; infinite; infinity.
 0 Indefinitely small; infinitesimal; — used to denote a quantity less than any assignable quantity; also, as a numeral, naught; nothing; zero.
 $\angle$ Angle; the angle; as, $\angle A B C$.
 $\perp$ The perpendicular; perpendicular to; as, draw $A B \perp C D$.
 $\parallel$ Parallel; parallel to; is parallel to; as, $A B \parallel C D$.
 $\bigcirc$ Circle; circumference; 360° .
 $\triangle$ Triangle; the triangle; as $\triangle A B C$; that is, the triangle $A B C$.
 $\square$ Square; the square; as, $\square A B C D$; that is, the square $A B C D$.
 $\square$ Rectangle; the rectangle; as, $\square A B C D$; that is, the rectangle $A B C D$.
 $\sqrt{\quad}$ Root; — indicating, when used without a figure placed above it, the square root; as, $\sqrt{4} = 2$; $\sqrt{4x^2} = 2x$. This symbol is called the radical sign. To denote any other than the square root, a figure (called the index) expressing the degree of the required root, is placed above the sign; as $\sqrt[n]{a}$, $\sqrt[n]{a}$, $\sqrt[n]{a}$, &c.
 $\frac{\quad}{\quad}$ The root of a quantity is also denoted by a fractional index at the right hand side of the quantity and above it, the denominator of the index expressing the degree of the root; as $a^{\frac{1}{2}}$, $a^{\frac{1}{3}}$, $a^{\frac{1}{4}}$; that is, the square, cube, and fifth roots of a , respectively.
 $[\quad]$ Parenthesis,
 $\{ \quad \}$ Brackets,
 $| \quad |$ Bar,
 $\frac{x}{y}$ $\frac{x}{y}$ indicate that the quantities to which they are applied, or which are inclosed by them, are to be taken together; as, $x + y^2$; $2(a + b)$; $a \times (b + c[e + d])$; $\frac{x}{y}$.
 $f, \text{ or } F$ Function; function of; as $y = f(x)$; that is, y is, or equals, a function of x .
 φ Various other letters or signs are frequently used by mathematicians to indicate functions; as, f, ϕ, ψ, π , and the like.
 d Differential; as, dx ; that is, the differential of x .
 δ Variation; as δx ; that is, the variation of x .
 Δ Finite difference.
 Δ Differential co-efficient; derivative.
 $\delta, \delta, \Delta, D$, and sometimes others, are variously employed by different mathematicians, prefixed to quantities to denote that the differentials, variations, finite differences, or differential co-efficients of these quantities are to be taken; but the ordinary significations are those given above.
 $\int$ Integral; integral of; — indicating that the expression before which it is placed is to be integrated; as, $\int 2x dx = x^2$; that is, the integral of $2x dx$ is x^2 .
 $\int \int, \int \int \int$, &c. It is repeated to indicate that the operation of integration is to be performed twice, or three or more times, as $\int \int, \int \int \int$, &c. For a number of times greater than three, an index is commonly written at the right hand above; as, $\int^m x dx^m$; that is, the m th integral, or the result of m integrations of $x dx^m$.
 Σ Sum; algebraic sum; — commonly used to indicate the sum or summation of finite differences, and in nearly the same manner as the symbol f .
 ϵ Residual.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF DR. WEBSTER.

[From Barber's Historical Collections.]

NOAH WEBSTER, LL. D.

BELOW is a northern view of the house in which NOAH WEBSTER, LL. D., the author of the "AMERICAN DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE," was born. This house is situated on an elevated ridge of land, about one mile south of the Congregational Church in West Hartford, and about four miles west from the central part of the city of Hartford. The prominent buildings in the city are seen from the house; also Wadsworth's tower on Talcott Mountain, about six miles to the northwest. The house is now owned and occupied by Mr. Samuel Hurlbut, who has resided on this spot for a long period. Dr. Webster, in after life, cherished a warm affection for the home of his childhood, and on his last visit to the house, about a year before his death, requested Mr. Hurlbut to take good care of a grape-vine, about twenty rods northwest from the house, which was probably planted or cultivated by him in his youthful days.

DR. WEBSTER'S BIRTH-PLACE.

Dr. Webster was born October 16th, 1758. His father, Noah Webster, cultivated a small farm for his support, and was for many years a Justice of the Peace for the town of Hartford, and an officer of the church in the parish of West Hartford. His family consisted of two daughters and three sons, all of whom were brought up to unremitting industry in the employments of the farm. His early advantages were limited. Having overcome the objections of his father, whose means were not ample, he became a member of Yale College in September, 1774. The Revolutionary War broke out the next year, and although exempted from military service, in the autumn of 1777 he volunteered his services, and marched with his father and both his brothers, to stop the progress of General Burgoyne.

Having finished his education at the age of twenty, after having remained a short time at home, his father put into his hand an eight-dollar Continental bill, then worth about four dollars, saying, "you must now seek your living, I can do no more for you!" Being unable to prepare for professional life, he commenced the business of school teaching, which at that period afforded but a scanty support. For a period of ten years from the commencement of his literary course, he struggled through a series of difficulties, and still saw no favorable results. His spirits now failed him, and he gave way to the most gloomy forebodings. As a relief to his mind, he undertook to prepare a series of books for schools. This may be considered as a providential opening which conducted to a long course of usefulness, and one that enabled him to become an honor to his country, and to the age in which he lived.

The first draft of his "Spelling Book" was made in the year 1782. Most persons regarded his design as useless, and many had strong objections to the changes he proposed. Only two of his friends, John Trumbull and Joel Barlow, encouraged him with any hope of success. "No printer would undertake the publication on his own responsibility; and Mr. Webster was at last obliged to incur the whole risk, with a certainty, if the book failed, of being made a bankrupt for life. Though the work was on the whole received favorably, yet it made its way slowly into schools for a number of years. As it became more popular, the booksellers were glad to purchase the copyright, by allowing him a few mills on each copy. Though Mr. Webster's share of the profits was small, yet it furnished, at a subsequent period, nearly all the support of his family during the twenty years which he bestowed on the preparation of the AMERICAN DICTIONARY. Over fifty millions of the "Spelling Book" have now been printed, and the present circulation is about one million of copies per year. "Without the Spelling Book, the Dictionary could never have existed."

Mr. Webster was also distinguished as a political writer. In 1785, he published a pamphlet entitled "Sketches of American Policy." It contained, as Chancellor Kent of New York has frequently declared, the first distinct proposal made through the medium of the press, for the formation of a new Constitution of the United States. The great work, however, which will transmit the name of Dr. Webster to posterity, is his "American Dictionary of the English Language." This was published in 1828 in two quarto volumes of more than one thousand pages each. In 1840, he published a revised edition in two volumes, octavo. In 1843, he published a collection of Papers on Political, Literary, and Moral subjects, in one volume octavo, collected from his essays and pamphlets. This was the last volume he committed to the press; at the expiration of sixty years from the commencement of his literary labors in 1783. During the spring of 1843, Dr. Webster revised the Appendix of his Dictionary, and added some hundreds of words. "He completed the printing of it about the middle of May." It was the closing act of his life. His hand rested in its last labors, on the volume which he had commenced thirty-six years before. After a short illness, he died May 28th, 1843; closing a long, useful, and active life, in the full triumph of Christian faith.
